

Norsk Grotteblad nr 30, August 1995

Gamhågen 1992 - lengere å gå men mer å finne

Gamhågen 1992...

We began the years caving expedition by losing our way in fog, and retired to our tents where the primus thawed us out. The next day we saw the beautiful surface features of the area for the first time.

We searched for new and exciting holes and after a while found a narrow opening in a smaller stream. After a little creeping we came to a large room with the sound of a waterfall. Wetsuits are needed for further progress. The marble is white as crystal. The water reached up to my hips and disappeared in a 3 to 4 meter fall. Some meters beyond the fall the stream sumped.

Later we explored the room where we first met the stream. From here there is a wide but low passage which falls gently. After an hour pushing the passage became too steep for further progress, but the cave was promising enough for another trip.