Vadveriehppidalen: Vadvevagges siste grottejomfruelige utpost (eller?)

The valley Vadveriehppi: Vadvevagges lastunexplored area (or?)

Climate changes and global heating has made new areas accessible, as melted ice and snow reveals undiscovered caves. Since 2005, Swedish speleologists have been exploring several caves in Vadveriehppi Valley at the border between Sweden and Norway. The two major caves are called Vadveriehppigrottan and Golfbanan, the first being more than 2km long and 200 m deep, while the latter is a 450 m labyrinth system. Both caves are vulnerable, and visitors are asked to show attention and care. The Swedish Speleological Association is arranging their annual meeting Fjällmötet in this area from the 10th of August and a week on. Some of the entrances require SRT.
